

Toys, Beliefs, Democracy

In an ideal world, adults would routinely base their beliefs on evidence and reasoning. Unfortunately though, adults in the real world often derive emotional and psychological satisfaction from their beliefs, and this satisfaction becomes the main motivation for them.

It's like they're children, and their beliefs are their cherished toys. To what extent might human nature be incompatible with democracy? To what extent might human nature require democracy?