

A classical painting of a bearded man, likely representing the Apostle Paul, sitting at a desk. He has a thick, dark beard and is wearing a red robe over a green tunic. He is resting his head on his right hand, looking thoughtfully towards the viewer. On the desk in front of him are a quill pen and an open book. The background is dark and indistinct.

Paul and eMail?

The Apostle was one of the most influential letters writers in history.
Could such a person exist in our technological world?