

The nature of a nature is to be unchanging.

Throughout history, we continue to have the same personal and social problems. We may think civilization has solved the problem of violence and war. However, our violence is now symbolic, expressed in language and money. The capacity for physical violence has never left us, though. That's why physical violence and military war is still with us and always will be.