

There's a joke about a man who stopped beating his head against a wall and when asked why, he said it feels so good when he stops. An interesting question occurs. All else being equal, is the cessation of pain preferable to the presence of its opposite?