Political Language and Bias

A current way of thinking, often described as postmodern, holds that any text has multiple interpretations and that no one interpretation is necessarily the correct one. If this is really true, how can political language express facts? How can news reporters resist what for them might be the "privileged" viewpoint?