

Speeding in an Erroneous Zone

In response to the words of some organization or person, some people get excited about an idea, and they start fervently thinking about it. They then begin traveling through many related ideas and their implications. Their original idea is wrong-headed though, so their journey may be reckless. Political ideas are a good example. Cultural ideas another.