

Will and Meaning

Genuine free will requires uncaused events whose existence can neither be scientifically verified nor intellectually conceived. It seems that we go through life pretending to decide and that nothing means anything.