

Me First

Every action is selfish. Though self-preservation is inherent in all living things, it is for humans not just physical but psychological and spiritual. In the fullest sense, we desire not just physical sustenance and safety but the belief and faith that we are ultimately significant.

To make this desire come true, we generate families, we try to accumulate money or power, we give to charity, etc. Even Christ did what He did "for the joy that was set before Him" (Hebrews 12:2).

Selfishness has lots of negative connotations. Maybe it shouldn't.
