

Assuming centuries of human life continue, will our best and deepest thinkers and observers have significantly approached the ultimate truths of existence? Will they be compelled, with new eyes, to rediscover the timeless truths of the past instead?