

Academic Text

In today's postmodern academic world, text has broadened its significance. It used to be words, usually written. Now, text can be any perception which can signify meaning, like an image, sounds, or even a facial expression. It must be this way because, in philosopher Jacques Derrida's words, there is “nothing outside the text.”