

Peccably Dressed?

In my younger immature years, I took as truth that "clothes make the man," and looking back I see the ambiguity of this statement.

It's sometimes true that "the man or the woman makes the clothes." As long as they're clean, clothes worn by a person who is respected for all the right reasons reflect the reasons for this respect. He or she may not be stylish in a traditional sense but they look good because they wear their clothes well, often in a more "relaxed" way. What we see as confident independence we admire.
