

Bureaufiliacs

Their idea of a good time Saturday night is to sit at home feasting on their favorite reading materials. They might begin with an appetizer of by-laws and then proceed to the main course of municipal statutes with revisions as a second helping. Not yet sated, selected passages from Robert's Rules of Order serve as an anticipated, well-earned, and decadent dessert. They retire to slumber, no doubt to dream of another wonderful day at the office.

With all the people in this world who have ever lived in literate times, there must be some people like this or similar to this.