

National Divorce

The cultural and political clash between modernism and postmodernism has finally resulted in a situation where two general groups of people embrace values which are clearly irreconcilable.

It's the progressives versus the conservatives, a conflict which is becoming warlike with no room for compromise. Consequently, some are promoting an idea called "national divorce." However, like beef where the meat and fat are marbled together, the two sides live together within states. It's unclear how such a separation would or even could work without rewriting the United States map.
