

God's Existence

Who has the burden of absolute proof, an atheist or a theist?

What would each be compelled to agree counts as absolute proof?

If the existence of absolute proof could not be rationally agreed on, what threshold of probability could be agreed on?

If every reasonably rational person in the world became an atheist, how would the world become different? If every reasonably rational person in the world became a theist, how would the world become different?