

Gravity of Balance

Is there a psychological need to balance? For example, while walking on a sidewalk, there may be an impulse to step directly on a crack, and one's stride or gait must sometimes be distorted in order to do it. But there's a problem when you succeed. Now you may have an impulse to make sure the other foot steps on a crack an equal number of times.