

Some say the worst attribute of hell is the isolation which separates a person from any companionship. Even Christians believe that hell's essence is separation from God.

How do they account though for those people who prize isolation and aloneness above all else? Are they implying that hermits are in a perverse state of denial?