

Professorial Professionalism?

Many think that college professors ideologically indoctrinate students.

It's relatively easy to sound smart. All you need is a conceptual vocabulary and the syntactic skill to make your sentences work and cohere. Few of these abilities, learned or innate, imply the intuition or cognitive speed and versatility required in the real world of work and human interaction.

How many of these professors would not have jobs were it not for the collectivism they preach as their gospel?

If you think this speculation is baseless, statistics suggest that the largest single group of people identifying as collectivists are college professors and their students, especially in non-STEM areas.
