

To whom it may concern,

*Damned if you do. Damned if you don't.
Blessed if you do; blessed if you don't.*

— One who knows

In our postmodern age of textual deconstruction, anything can mean something to someone. What could the message above mean?

Has it been generated by a human or an artificial intelligence? Does this distinction matter?

Is it possibly profound? Is it simple nonsense appearing under the guise of profound simplicity?

Is this something a deeply insightful person would say?
Is this something a person would say who just wanted to seem smart or intellectual?

Does the writer “know” or believe, or is this a statement of faith?

How do the background and font add to its possible meanings?
