

Isotropic Utensils

I watched a show speculating on what the edge of the universe would look like. The narrator predicted it would boggle any mind. However, I have something even more intriguing—utensils. I assume that when any intelligence life form eats, they want to be fastidiously civilized.

Physicists have described the universe as isotropic, meaning that it looks the same in all directions. Similarly, are eating utensils the same everywhere in the universe? Would any intelligent species basically use forks, spoons, and knives? Maybe there are other utensil forms of which humans have not even conceived. Until I resolve this perplexity, I'm afraid the nature of the universe's edge will not interest me very much. Priorities you know.